Object: Invitation to the 2010 Korean Government Scholarship Program for Graduate Students

Dear Dr. Sergienko,

With great honor I write this letter on behalf of Pukyong National University (PKNU), Republic of Korea, in order to convey to you and your institution my utmost sincerity and the warmest of greetings. I wish to express my extended appreciation to our precious collaboration for enhancing an academic exchange for the mutual interest of our both institutions, which from here on forth brings us into a fruitful and happy relationship.

I have the further honor to inform you of the 2010 Korean Government Scholarship Program for Graduate Students that our Government initiates to promote the cooperation in international higher education between Korean universities and institutions from across the globe. I am very pleased to invite you to send your finest graduate students to our university through this governmental scholarship program.

As you might be aware, Pukyong National University, the oldest and most unique university in southeast Korea, currently provides advanced marine and fisheries technology to many African universities for the purpose of promoting the future industries of Africa.

Offering a strong academic foundation, Pukyong is well-known within Korea for excellence in marine and fisheries science, fisheries technician training programs and ship officer training programs. For the past 70 years, as a leading educator in the fields of ocean and fisheries science, Pukyong made invaluable contributions to the prosperity of the nation. As the world knows, the Korean fisheries industry has been vital to national development and has acted as a cornerstone in Korea's astonishing modernization. This program of Pukyong aims to transfer the successful model of the Korean industrial development to the African region for its economic growth, reflecting one of the major goals of the Presidential Council on the national branding of Korea.

Additionally, as a leading educational organization with special academic emphasis on environmental and marine sciences and technologies, alternative energy and marine bioprocess research, Pukyong continues taking charge of the R&D activities for the Korean Meteorological Administration, the development and management of marine LMOs (Living Modified Organism) and a global research lab in order to investigate heavy precipitation systems around the East-China Sea under the supervision of Korean Ministry of Education, Science and Technology.

Every year, we welcome many international students from around the world; currently more than 800 outstanding students from 32 countries pursue their studies at our institution. With your great help, I hope that many of your finest graduate students will engage in this 2010 Korean Government Scholarship Program for Graduate Students. Whilst they enjoy their study with us at Pukyong, I guarantee that they will receive our fullest attention, and we will aid them on the path to becoming future global leaders. Reciprocally, I would recommend to my students the participation in any similar programs that you might suggest. I sincerely feel that our joint efforts will benefit students of both our institutions and our countries.

I reiterate my deep gratitude for your interest and consideration in this collaboration, and wish you and your institution happiness and prosperity.

Please accept, Dr. Sergienko, the assurances of my highest consideration.
